This morning the sun was shining, and I decided to begin seeing the sights of London. So I asked the manager of my hotel what I should see first and he advised me to go to the Tower of London in the morning and to Westminster in the afternoon.

I set off at about nine in the morning by the underground train, and managed to get out at the right station. I had to walk a short distance from the latter to the tower, and found myself in a group of several other people, some of them foreigners like myself, who were also taking the opportunity of the fine weather to see something of London. We reached the entrance to the Tower, crossed a bridge and were met by a soldier in strange red and yellow clothes, with a big crown sewn on his chest, a flat black hat on his head and a long stick in his hand. I knew from books I had read that he was one of the "Beefeaters", the old soldiers dressed in clothes of long ago who guard the Tower.

The Beefeater showed us the Crown Jewels, which the King and Queen wear on special days, the prisons in which famous people were kept long ago, and the places where some queens of England had their heads cut off. Listening to all these strange stories and seeing the old stones of the Tower, I could easily imagine the terrible things that had happened within those walls.

In the afternoon I went out again, this time to see Westminster, with its bridge over the Thames, the House of Parliament, Big Ben and Westminster Abbey. As I looked at these famous buildings, at the Abbey where kings and queens of England are crowned, at the tower of Big Ben, which is heard all over the world through the B.B.C., and at the Houses of Parliament, where history is made day after day, I felt that I was at the heart of modern England, just as that morning I had been at the heart of English history when I was at the Tower.

Childhood is a time when there are few responsibilities to make life difficult. If a child has good parents, he is fed, looked after and loved, whatever he may do. It is improbable that he will ever again in his life be given so much without having to do anything in return. A child finds pleasure in playing in the rain, or in the snow. His first visit to the seaside is a marvelous adventure.

الطفولة هي الوقت الذي تكون فيه المسؤوليات قليلة أن تجعل الحياة صعبة. لو أن الطفل قد رزق والدين صالحين فسوف يطعمانه ويهتمان به ويحبانه ، مهما بدر منه. وليس من المحتمل أنه في أي مرحلة أخرى

من حياته سيعطي الكثير دون أن يكون عليه عمل أي شيء في المقابل. والطفل يجد سعادته في اللعب تحت المطر أو في الثلج ، وتعد زيارته الأولي للبحر مغامرة رائعة.
