

Recent advances in ultrasonic instrumentation have allowed for improved visualization of the prostate and related structures. These techniques have proved useful in the assessment of a variety of malignant and non-malignant disorders, and often the margins of the prostate and contiguous structures can be assessed both simply and accurately (Resnick, 1983).