

INTRODUCTION

Although patients with spinal cord injuries are small percentage of all trauma victims ,yet the associated high rate of death is concern. The anaesthesiologist may be involved in resuscitation and stabilization of the acutely patient beside their role in providing anaesthesia for such patients.

This essay will discuss the great problems which will face the anaesthesiologist and the possible adequate management for such patients aiming to minimize the complications and the high death rate associated with such patients.