

INTRODUCTION AND AIM OF THE WORK

The extension of the anaesthetists interest beyond the confines of the operating theatre is a significant and vital trend of current anaesthetic practice. The running of pain clinics provides abundant clinical interest and a means of affording worth-while relief to some patients whose suffering might otherwise remains unabated.

This essay has been suggested to discuss the methods used in interventional management of chronic pain.